Across the Country efforts are underway to align local efforts with the vision set forth in the National HIV/AIDS Strategy (NHAS) and the Affordable Care Act. Here in Alameda the Health Care Services Agency, the Office of AIDS Administration and our community partners are all pushing forward to embrace the NHAS vision so that the County also becomes a “place where new HIV infections are rare and those individuals who are infected with HIV have unfettered access to high quality, life-extending care, free from stigma and discrimination regardless of age, gender, race/ethnicity, sexual orientation, gender identity or socio-economic circumstance”.

The strategy sets forth three primary goals: 1) reducing the number of people who become infected with HIV; 2) increasing access to care and improving health outcomes for people living with HIV; and 3) reducing HIV-related health disparities. To achieve each of these goals requires that people know their status and adopt safer sexual practices. Studies show that HIV+ people who know their status tend to protect their intimate partners from HIV transmission. So getting more people tested is critical to achieving the vision of the NHAS, especially in populations hardest hit by the epidemic.

In 2010, the Office of AIDS Administration began an important effort to increase the number of Alameda County residents who know their HIV status. We forged a partnership with Corizon, the inmate health services provider at Santa Rita Jail, Planned Parenthood, HEPPAC, Cardea, and La Clinica to compete for one of five expanded HIV testing grants awarded by the State Office of AIDS. In August, 2011, our new collaboration won nearly $1,000,000 to increase HIV testing in some of Alameda County’s key medical settings. Over the next two years 100,000 individuals will be tested for HIV.

Expanding HIV testing in Santa Rita Jail and in clinics located at Planned Parenthood, methadone sites and selected school based health centers is an important step towards ensuring that members of underserved populations in Alameda County also know their current HIV status and receive appropriate counseling and care. This is especially important for African Americans and Latinos who are disproportionately represented in these settings.

In addition, each of our partners is also receiving technical assistance and evaluation expertise to link HIV+ individuals to quality care earlier in disease progression and to work with them to notify their intimate partners using social networking strategies. These interventions aim to improve health outcomes and reduce HIV-related health disparities, key goals of the NHAS and the Alameda County Public Health Department.

Much more needs to be done to realize the NHAS goals. We are hopeful and excited by these developments and determined to continue the real battle, the fight against HIV/AIDS. Working together we can make the difference.
In his recently released 2012-13 budget, Governor Brown proposes reducing state contributions to ADAP by approximately $24 million, based on estimated savings to the program in the coming fiscal year. He also calls for $14 million in new revenue by imposing copayments on ADAP clients who would pay anywhere from $70 to over $300 a month for their drugs. These copayments would be for people living with HIV/AIDS whose income might be slightly more than $10,000 a year.

California AIDS advocates are calling on the state legislature to roll back these devastating cuts and cost sharing proposals now threatening the state’s AIDS Drug Assistance Program (ADAP).

“His proposals would force the State’s most vulnerable to pay far more than they can afford for crucial HIV treatment – or to go without” said AIDS Project Los Angeles Executive Director Craig E. Thompson

ADAP currently provides life-saving HIV/AIDS medications at no cost or low cost to some 40,000 uninsured or underinsured Californians earning up to 400 percent of the federal poverty level (FPL). The approximately 1,900 Alameda County residents living with HIV/AIDS, who are enrolled in ADAP, account for almost 5 percent of all ADAP beneficiaries statewide. The program is funded through state general funds, federal funds and rebates from pharmaceutical companies. In FY 2010 – 2011, Alameda County ADAP clients had more than 48,000 prescriptions filled and received medications that cost ADAP more than $15M.

If allowed to remain unchanged, the State Budget Proposal would raise the costs of vital treatment for the lowest-income Californians living with HIV/AIDS which will make life-saving HIV/AIDS drugs inaccessible to the state’s poorest people. “The legislature rejected these staggering cost sharing proposals last year, and they should do so again,” Thompson said. “They’re too high for poor beneficiaries and they are definitely bad for public health.”

The governor’s budget counts on savings for ADAP by transitioning clients to new county Low Income Health Programs (LIHPs), some of which have yet to begin operations. These programs will eventually serve uninsured Californians living at 133 percent of the FPL in about half of California’s counties, including an estimated 10,000 current ADAP beneficiaries. The proposed budget also calculates savings from transitioning clients, earning between 101 and 200 percent of the FPL, into the LIHPs. State Office of AIDS (OA) estimates show clients, on average, transitioning into the new county programs in January of 2012. However, Alameda and Los Angeles Counties are planning their transitions as of July 1, 2012.

“It’s reckless to assume savings from programs that are just getting off the ground,” Thompson explains, “We’re concerned the ADAP budget will come up short, if these savings fail to materialize.”

Kabir Hypolite, Director, Alameda County Office of AIDS Administration states that “We cannot yet say what level of savings the Low Income Health Program will generate because too many variables remain. It makes much more budgetary sense to avoid such cuts, for at least a year or more, until we know the actual impact of LIHP”.

Requiring low-income people to meet substantial cost sharing obligations to receive life-saving HIV medications will have devastating short and long-term consequences for HIV/AIDS care and prevention.

Cuts to ADAP services will have costly implications and will result in advanced HIV disease, increased co-morbidities and even premature death.

Medications provided by ADAP also help prevent the spread of HIV. People on effective treatment can reduce the amount of HIV in their blood to undetectable levels. Mounting evidence shows an undetectable viral load makes HIV-positive people less likely to spread the virus to others. A study published by the National Institutes of Health shows HIV-positive people who are on drug therapies are 96% less likely to transmit the virus to their uninfected partners. For every new HIV infection prevented, California saves an estimated $600,000 in lifetime treatment costs. ADAP is an essential bridge to the promise of health care reform in California and it’s critical that we ensure that ADAP remains available for everyone who needs it.

“Going forward with these budget proposals now”, say Hypolite, “places poor people’s lives in jeopardy and undermines the goals of the National HIV AIDS Strategy”.

These proposed ADAP cuts will ultimately result in HIV-positive people dropping out of the program altogether, in effect denying them the very medication they need to stay healthy. Generating budget savings by creating a system that denies medication to the most vulnerable among us is unjust, and certainly not the most effective way to deal with tough economic times.

Those of us who provide HIV testing are accustomed to working within alcohol-centered environments (bars and clubs) and, when it comes to our clients, alcohol-related decision-making. Because of our commitment to non-judgmentally “meet people where they are at”, and because alcohol use is so widespread, it can be easy to forget the implications of alcohol use on HIV risk.

Our project, Berkeley Builds Capacity, is funded by SAMHSA to reduce HIV and related substance abuse in East Bay college students. One thing we’ve noticed is that, in HIV work, we tend to focus substance use conversations on intravenous drug use which, though critical, is not the only or most common substance used. For college students (community and 4 year) the most commonly used substances are alcohol and marijuana. Alcohol in particular has negative consequences when paired with sexual situations.

The National Institute on Alcohol Abuse’s (NIAA) “Alcohol Alert” number 80 focuses on HIV and alcohol, and makes some points that are valuable for anyone working to reduce HIV infections and improve the health of HIV+ people. Here are a few:

- For HIV+ people, alcohol can increase how fast the virus grows; it may interfere directly with ART medications; it can put already vulnerable organs at further risk; and it can impact peoples’ ability to comply with their medication regimens.
- Alcohol also raises problems for HIV prevention. It can decrease inhibitions, impair judgment, and increase likelihood of higher-risk sexual behaviors.

Neena Murgai
By: Pam Casey

The OAA welcomes Neena Murgai, PhD, MPH, who serves as the Deputy Director of Surveillance and Epidemiology. She has worked with ACPHD for over 10 years as a senior epidemiologist. In her new role she will work to enhance HIV/AIDS reporting methods and data systems for Alameda County, and coordinate and direct the epidemiological analysis of local HIV/AIDS data. She will also manage field staff engaged in HIV/AIDS surveillance activities, such as case investigations and reporting, and those providing targeted HIV testing among selected high-risk populations.

“The epidemiology of HIV/AIDS tells the story of the epidemic in Alameda County. It provides the best description of the burden of HIV/AIDS in the community, including the risk groups and populations that are disproportionately impacted and how these patterns have changed over time. The HIV/AIDS epidemiology profile will help focus prevention and planning efforts in the community” states Dr Murgai.

We look forward to her leading the Public Health Department’s effort to in strengthening our data and reports, by assessing gaps in data and providing HIV/AIDS data that is meaningful and accessible for prevention, planning, and advocacy.
Actions Speak Louder Than Words at East Oakland Garden

By Pam Casey

Acta Non Verba: Youth Urban Farm Project, a community-based program since August 2010, manages a garden that serves as a natural sanctuary in one of East Oakland’s most underserved areas. Located at Tassafaronga Park (83rd Ave & E Street in Oakland), the garden provides fresh and affordable produce to individuals who otherwise lack access to fresh produce. There is a beautiful array of organically-grown kale, broccoli, Swiss chard, cauliflower, beets and herbs neatly arranged in several raised beds. Executive Director, Kelly Carlisle reports that there have been five harvests since the garden opened and at least 100 pounds of produce have been given to needy families in the surrounding area. The project encourages intergenerational relationships as well. Most of the volunteers have been youth aged 5-12 and community elders. The project also raises money for college funds for participating youth.

A few of the local partners include the Oakland Department Of Parks and Recreation (OPR), Oakland Redevelopment Department, East Bay Urban Agriculture Alliance (EBUAA), and donors include The California Endowment, Sweetwater Organics Nursery, and Keep Oakland Beautiful. Future activities include starting a “Salsa Bed”, a weekly farmers market, twice monthly yoga classes in the garden, and classes on beekeeping.

If you would like to participate in the growing success of this project, the wish list includes a 115’x100’ wood & wire perimeter fence, a chicken coop or tractor for 7 hens, a large beehive, a small greenhouse, tool caddy, and lumber. Visit the website at www.anvfarm.org, or contact Kelly at (510)972-3276 for more information.

OAA’s new Deputy Director, Leroy Blea

by Duran Rutledge

Trying to sit down with LeRoy Blea, the new OAA Deputy Director of Operations for this interview was like a roller coaster at Great America, you just have to hold on and enjoy the ride. He speaks with such quickness and passion about his work in HIV and what he invasions for the OAA and HIV services for Alameda County that you can’t help but be inspired. No stranger to HIV, LeRoy has been in the fight against HIV since the earlier days of the epidemic. He comes to the OAA from the City of Berkeley where he was the AIDS Director.

He says that this work in HIV is his way of paying homage to those heroes who fought and died in the early days of the epidemic so that 30 years later we could continue the fight.

In addition to working closely with the OAA Director, Kabir Hypolite in steering the OAA’s HIV/AIDS overall activities, LeRoy will also be responsible for supervising program staff as well as helping to effectively shape how the OAA will work with increased collaboration and leadership with the PLWHA, community leaders and service providers to address the HIV epidemic within Alameda County.
Cal-PEP has moved from their previous location on Franklin and 14th to their new location on Adeline since October 2011.

In addition to HIV testing, the agency will soon open a Family Planning Clinic at its new location. The services will offer STD testing, birth control, and PAP Smears. The clinic will open on the 2nd and 4th Tuesdays of the month from 1 to 5 PM starting in February 2012.

The agency will soon be offering drug treatment services as well.

For more information on Cal-PEP services, call (510) 874-7850.
